

People gather outside Hackney Town Hall with flags that state 'Love Shouldn't Hurt' to show their support for the UN's '16 Days of Activism to End Gender-Based Violence' campaign

LOVE SHOULDN'T HURT

HACKNEY united to show its support for the United Nations (UN) '16 Days of Activism to End Gender-Based Violence' campaign last month.

Residents joined representatives from Homerton hospital, Unison, the police, councillors and the Mayor and Speaker of Hackney on the steps of Hackney Town Hall on 26 November to show their support for the borough's campaign.

The Council is holding 16 days of action, as part of the UN's global campaign to help eliminate gender-based violence, with a series of free events in Youth Hubs and community spaces.

On 5 December Hackney Museum is set to host an open event from 5.30 to 8pm, which will see the Council's Domestic Abuse Intervention Service discuss the borough's 'violence against women and girls strategy'.

Domestic violence rises significantly during the festive period. The combination of financial pressures, free-flowing alcohol and being in close quarters can exert additional burden on relationships.

In an abusive relationship, this pressure is increased.

Official statistics from the latest crime survey show that last year, in England and Wales, 1.9 million adults aged 16 to 59 experienced domestic abuse. This equates to six in 100 adults, with women more likely than men to be victims. Data also shows that nationally more than half of all female homicide victims were killed by a former or current partner, with around two women being killed every week.

Tackling domestic abuse and eliminating gender-based violence is a key priority for the Council. It works in close collaboration with third sector partners, the police and health services to protect survivors of abuse and bring perpetrators to justice.

Cllr Rebecca Rennison, Cabinet Member for Domestic Abuse, said: "We want anyone who is experiencing abuse to know that, when they are ready, we are here to support them. This year we are focusing in particular on the importance of healthy relationships and encouraging people to seek help if they are worried or find themselves in an abusive relationship."

PLANS are underway to transform and restore parts of Abney Park – the Grade II listed Victorian cemetery – in Stoke Newington.

The Council is applying for a Heritage Lottery Fund grant to improve the park. Proposed works include more restoration work to the chapel and improvements at both entrances.

Abney Park is one of the 'magnificent seven' cemeteries in London. It is the resting place of around 200,000 people in approximately 60,000 graves, 14 of which are listed. It is no longer a working cemetery but is run as a park.

As well as memorials, the park is home to a nondenominational funerary chapel and two Egyptian style lodges, all of which are in need of improvement.

There are two entrances to Abney Park: the Church Street entrance, which is only accessible to those who can climb stairs, and the Stoke Newington High Street entrance.

The Abney Park restoration project will take a holistic approach to conserving and developing the park, its built and natural heritage and the experience of park users.

The plans include:

- Making the entrance on Stoke Newington High Street more accessible by adding a ramp
- Restoring the chapel to allow it to host weddings, concerts and other events

- Expanding a programme of activities at the site
- Building a new cafe and flexible community space at the Stoke Newington High Street entrance.

Nominate women who make a difference in their communities

THE Council is looking to showcase 100 Hackney women who are driving change and making a difference in their community, to mark the 100th anniversary of the Representation of the People Act 1918.

Residents are being asked to nominate inspirational women who live or work in Hackney and are driving positive change in their communities. They could be: community volunteers; young leaders; equality campaigners; women in science, technology, engineering and maths; those helping to end violence against women; females in arts and culture; sportswomen; and women in public life or public services.

Nominations close on 9 December and should include a photograph of the nominee with 100 to 200 words explaining why they should be celebrated.

To nominate, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/hackney-women; or post to: Maariyah Pathan, Room 53, Hackney Town Hall, Mare Street, E8 1EA.

said: "The Abney Park restoration project has been developed to revitalise the historic buildings on site, improve accessibility and create a vibrant programme of activities.

"Presently, the park buildings are underused, neglected and at risk of ruin. The plans will enhance its use and take it to the next chapter in its history while retaining its unique tranquil setting and haven for rare flora and fauna.

"Local people and those visiting from further afield will be able to fully engage with Abney Park and its heritage; be that as a nature reserve, a historic landscape, a place of remembrance or as a local park."

The Council would like feedback from residents on proposals. This information will help to put together a fundraising bid to the Heritage Lottery Fund and Big Lottery Fund.

The consultation closes on 21 December.

Discussing Dalston

NEARLY 100 residents, businesses and voluntary group representatives passionately shared their ambitions for the future of Dalston in a Council-led community event last month.

The Dalston Conversation meeting at Petchey Academy, E8, on 27 November saw residents who have lived in the area for decades debate with newcomers and others about what the Council's priorities should be to ensure new buildings and investment brings opportunities for everyone.

The event was the latest in a series of ways to get involved, with more than 3,000 people taking part online and hundreds more attending pop-up conversations around the area.

Dalston's population has gone up 12 per cent in just four years, and the prospect of Crossrail 2 – a proposed high-speed train line that would link the town centre directly to north, central and south-west London – means developers and landowners are likely to want to build more tall buildings in the area.

The Council can't control all change, but will use the community's feedback to shape how it tackles this challenge – whether that's getting the right buildings in the right places or ensuring everyone has access to new jobs, education or arts opportunities. It will publish a plan based on people's views next year.

Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, said: "The Council I lead will take action to ensure that through the Dalston Conversation, the growth of Dalston brings local jobs, better public spaces and protects the cultural and community institutions that local people value."

News in brief

GLA green light for Britannia

THE Council's proposals to build a new leisure centre, a 1,140 pupil secondary school, and homes by Shoreditch Park have been approved.

The Greater London Authority (GLA) gave the green light to the application on 26 November. Hackney's Local Planning Authority had approved the scheme on 7 November.

The new buildings will be placed on the site of the existing Britannia Leisure Centre, which will not close until the new one is open.

It's hoped that construction will start on the leisure centre and school early next year and complete in 2021. For more information, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/britannia-site

Hackney commits to being a social enterprise borough

HACKNEY reiterated its commitment to being a social enterprise borough with the launch of the 'Hackney is Social' manifesto at an event last month.

The manifesto aims for the borough to have an environment 'where social enterprises operate in all markets generating local jobs, opportunities, vital services and social impact'.

Social enterprises are businesses which reinvest or donate their profits to try to create positive social change. There are now more than 300 operating in Hackney.

The conference, held at Hackney House in Shoreditch on 15 November, saw Mayor Philip Glanville, on behalf of the Council, alongside 28 other organisations, announce their commitments in support of the manifesto and the growth and sustainability of social enterprises in Hackney.

The manifesto is the culmination of two years work by members of the Hackney Social Enterprise Place Partnership. It was coordinated by Hackney Cooperative Developments.

To read the manifesto, or find out more about social enterprises, visit: www.hackneyissocial.co.uk

Residents raise their concerns with Mayor Glanville at Mayor's Question Time AROUND 100 residents and business owners turned out to raise their issues and ideas at the second annual Hackney Mayor's Question Time.

The event, in the Council Chamber on 26 November, was streamed live on YouTube and saw Mayor Philip Glanville respond to questions covering a wide range of topics for two hours.

Areas covered included: the housing crisis, social housing, temporary accommodation and the private rented sector; domestic violence; young people, opportunities, and their physical and mental health; crime and antisocial behaviour; licensing; public consultations; new communities, different priorities and social cohesion; the environment, tree planting, air quality, electric cars and parking; Universal Credit; and support for people with disabilities.

The event was chaired by long-term resident and lecturer at Birkbeck University, Dr Melissa Butcher, who writes regularly on issues relating to gentrification, diversity and social cohesion.

Melissa said: "It was great to see the range of questions. There's clearly a need for this kind of event, particularly given the intensity of social change that we've seen in Hackney. It's important that residents are able to give voice to their concerns and be listened to."

Mayor Glanville added: "We need to have open and honest discussions so the Council can explain its vision and work, people can share their thoughts and ideas, and we can all work together to keep Hackney a great place to live for everyone."

Sharon D Clarke in 'Mother Goose', 2008; 12. Clive Rowe and Tameka Empson in 'Aladdin', 2009

Oh yes it is!

1 Hackney Empire celebrates 20 years of panto

It was worth it. 'Dick Whittington's' success was to spark two decades of consecutive pantos at the theatre and encounters with people who would become close friends and collaborators for life.

It was here she would meet musical director Steven Edis, for example, and regular panto performers like Tony Whittle, Clive Rowe and Kat B. Plus, of course, Olivier award-winning Sharon D Clarke.

Susie and Sharon met the following year, when they appeared together in 'Cinderella'. While their meeting was to change Susie's personal life, that panto was a milestone in her professional life.

While staging 'Cinderella', and having been refused a Lottery grant, the Empire launched a refurbishment appeal. "Prince Charles came. It was the most extraordinary night. He came back stage and was so generous," she says.

The fundraising was wildly successful and meant that, when the theatre reopened

"If someone had told me in 1998 that we would still be entertaining London in 20 years' time I wouldn't have believed them" in 2004, its pantomime was in the public eye. Susie picked 'Aladdin', casting Clive as the dame but soon discovered that Ian McKellen was playing the same role, in the same show, at the Old Vic.

The press arrived in their droves to review and compare the two shows. Luckily, they fell for Clive, and the Empire's reputation for pantos was cemented.

In 2008, and having performed in countless more pantos together, Susie and Sharon were married on the very same stage.

Two years later, Susie was made creative director and, while the panto remained a local show peppered with Hackney references and made for its residents, it began to attract audiences from far afield.

The 2012 Olympics and increased rail links into Hackney all boosted panto sales. In fact, the annual show now represents an astonishing 45 per cent of the Empire's total income.

Over 55,000 people attend each year and around 56 per cent of them are from Hackney and its neighbouring boroughs.

The panto takes up a good deal of Susie's year. She begins to storyboard the show as early as February. Design commences in April so that by June casting starts.

In fact, since stepping down as the Empire's creative director in January, she has been writing a book about panto. And this year, to celebrate 20 years at the helm of Hackney pantos, she and Steven are staging 'Aladdin', roping in many of the famous friends who have helped the pair make the Empire's annual productions famous.

Gemma Sutton plays the title role, Kat B the Genie of the Lamp. Clive will make his Hackney comeback in the role of Widow Twankey while comedian Tameka Empson will also have a Hackney homecoming as The Empress.

Susie says: "If someone had told me in 1998 that we would still be entertaining London in 20 years' time I wouldn't have believed them."

"But, like in a true Hackney panto, dreams do come true, and thanks to a family of amazing creatives, actors, technicians, staff and our amazing audience, we've become one of London's top pantos, and helped rejuvenate a wonderful theatre to boot."

PANTOS are full of magic, and no one knows that better than Susie McKenna. The former creative director of Hackney Empire is putting on her 20th panto, and some pretty magical things have happened in those two decades of Christmas shows: not least meeting her wife, Sharon D Clarke.

In fact, many of the milestones in Susie's life have played out, quite literally, on the Empire's pantomime stage. In 1998, she got the job of writing and directing 'Dick Whittington' at the Hackney Empire. It was a big break, with a tiny budget.

Susie begged and borrowed to put the production together, driving a van as far afield as Nottingham to collect bits of set from friends.

It's the most wonderful

We wish it could be Christmas every day, with this guide to what's on in Hackney HACKNEY is firmly into the festive swing of things with a packed December filled with fabulous events, seasonal entertainment, and beautiful illuminations.

The holiday season started with a flash when the lights were switched on at Hackney Town Hall Square on 2 December.

For the first time ever, a 12-foot menorah (a nine-branched candelabrum) to mark the Jewish festival of Hanukkah was illuminated, as well as the Christmas tree lights. Panto characters from Hackney Empire's 'Aladdin' joined in the festivities.

This month, residents are being encouraged to shop local with a multitude of Christmas markets offering unique gifts from cool clocks to scented soaps.

East Bank is the powerhouse of culture, education,

IT'S hard to imagine on a dull, autumnal day – as rain sweeps across the former press and broadcast centres for the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic games – but Hackney Wick is set to become one of the world's leading cultural centres.

Often mistaken for a car park by residents, these vast aircraft hangar-style buildings will house the V&A's new collection and research centre linked to a second site in Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park: a brand-new museum at Stratford Waterfront. Together, they form V&A East, which promises to revolutionise the public's experience of visiting the world-leading museum of art, design and performance.

Due to open in 2023, the V&A is the anchor tenant for East Bank, a £1.1 billion hub of culture and education taking shape as part of the Olympic

V&A East will be a new model for collection storage and public display legacy. The scheme will also develop new sites for University College London (UCL), London College of Fashion, Sadler's Wells ballet and the BBC.

The collection and research centre in Hackney Wick aims to reinvent the idea of a museum store.

Visitors will be invited on a behind-the-scenes journey that demonstrates why objects are collected, how they are conserved and displayed, and how they help make sense of the past, present and future.

The V&A's stores are currently held at Blythe House in West London in a space not designed for public access. At the Hackney campus, known as Here East, they will be thrown open for all to see in a purpose-built home housing around 250,000 objects and at least 900 archives, spanning fashion, textiles, furniture, theatre, painting, sculpture, ceramics, glass, design, architecture, and digital.

Highlights announced at a press conference last month included a complete office designed by iconic American architect Frank Lloyd Wright in 1930, and a 15th-century ceiling from the now-destroyed Altamira Palace in Spain.

Further spaces will host pop-up displays, workshops, performances and screenings, alongside opportunities to see museum staff at work, carrying out conservation, research and exhibition preparation.

A viewing gallery will showcase a changing display from the V&A's collection of theatre stage cloths, carpets, textiles, tapestries and paintings, including a backcloth designed by Natalia Goncharova for the finale of Stravinsky's 'Firebird' in 1926.

The collection and research centre – designed by New York-based architects Diller Scofidio + Renfro – will bring treasures out of storage and into public view for the first time in generations.

A central hall will 'turn the store inside out', with a rich array of objects on rotating display, ranging from some of the V&A's smallest curiosities to the largest building fragments in the collection.

V&A Deputy Director, Tim Reeve, said: "V&A East will – for the first time – illuminate the entire lifecycle of museum practice innovation and growth taking shape in the park as part of the 2012 Olympic legacy in a transformational experience for visitors. From the moment of an object's acquisition, through its conservation, the research, enquiry and debate that follow, to its display as part of an exhibition, this 360-degree view is unprecedented and will revolutionise how people experience, and are inspired by, our collection."

Architect Elizabeth Diller added: "V&A East will be a new model for collection storage and public display. Planned from the inside out, this project will be like stepping into an immersive cabinet of curiosities."

Ten minutes' walk away, at Stratford Waterfront, a five-storey museum will feature two galleries with major exhibitions that will be complemented by new commissions, installations and interdisciplinary collaborations.

It will be the focus of a pioneering partnership with the Smithsonian Institution – the world's largest museum and research complex in the world – to produce exhibitions with a focus on bridging the worlds of art, design, science and humanities.

It is hoped the cultural institutions that take up home in East Bank, will form a creative synergy with the media and new technology businesses, and education institutions that have already taken root in the rest of the former press and broadcast centres.

Here East covers 1 million square feet and includes the Plexal centre for tech start-ups; The Gantry, 22 studios specifically for local businesses run by Hackney co-working firm The Trampery; Ford's European smart mobility innovation office; BT Sport broadcast studios; Sports Interactive video game company; and Wayne McGregor dance studio.

UCL and Loughborough University have opened sites here, enabling students to get a unique insight into the cutting-edge companies they share space with, which can in turn, source future employees. There are benefits for the wider community too. Loughborough University has launched a fully funded Masters programme for young people who study in the surrounding East London boroughs.

Gavin Poole, Here East CEO, said: "It was the white elephant of the Olympic Park. Some people wanted to bulldoze it to build homes. We do need those, but we need jobs too; 4,000 people will be working here by the new year and 50,000 visit us each year. And when the V&A opens, we'll get over 100,000 more."

"Imagine what this is going to be like for the local community when this world class cultural centre is here, interacting with leading universities and exciting businesses."

By Harriet Worsley

I'VE done a lot of different things over the course of my career," says Caroline Diehl. "But really, it's all been about two things: giving a voice to people who don't have one and championing the impact that the voluntary sector has in our communities."

The former head of the Media Trust, who was awarded an MBE in 2004, has lived in Hackney for over 35 years. After studying languages at the University of Cambridge she moved into a shared house with friends in Dalston.

"Then," she continues: "I moved to Stoke Newington and have been there ever since. My sons were both born in Homerton hospital. They went to William Patten School and now they're 25 and 27. One still lives in Hackney and the other's moved to Haringey. Hackney is absolutely home."

"Living here opened my eyes to a whole world I had never come across growing up in Surrey and then living in Cambridge," she explains. "One of the things I love is the diversity of backgrounds."

She also, however, has witnessed poverty. She taught languages at Haggerston School, where she later served as a governor. Caroline says: "Teaching there, and being involved in the Labour Party, I came across real disadvantage. There were girls at Haggerston who had never been outside their area, let alone their borough."

These early experiences in the inequality of opportunity would go on to shape her entire career. While teaching, she also began to volunteer at a women's liberation centre called A Woman's Place.

Caroline says: "It opened my eyes to the amazing voluntary sector and its impact. I was fascinated by that whole world."

So when a job came up at Community Service Volunteers (CSV) she applied. She became head of European fundraising at the charity (now known as Volunteering Matters), and stayed in the role for six years, only leaving to set up her own organisation – the Media Trust.

"I had come to realise just how many voluntary organisations and small charities there are out there, without whom society would fall apart," she says.

Most UK charities raise less than £1million a year and don't have the resources to spread the word about their work and raise vital funds. Yet, the UK's creative industries are among the best in the world. Wouldn't it be great if the world-leading communicators who work in those sectors could volunteer their time?

In the 24 years since Caroline founded the Media Trust to do just this, many organisations and young people – including those in Hackney – have benefitted.

The real Diehl

Caroline Diehl MBE has lived in Hackney for over 35 years, working within the charity and community sectors

In 2000 Caroline spotted another opportunity to raise the profile of the voluntary sector. The rise of digital television led to a sudden explosion in channels, enabling her to launch the Community Channel: the UK's first dedicated television channel for social action, charity and community stories.

"18 years later, it's still around," Caroline says. "Of the 300 plus channels in the UK, it is still our most diverse. It has wellbeing and cooking programmes but also some really diverse, unusual content, highlighting people of all sorts of backgrounds, faiths and abilities.

"We tell local stories to a national audience. Someone might see a programme about a community project in Falmouth, find themselves inspired, and set up something similar in Dalston."

Last year, 23 years after founding the Media Trust,

Caroline stepped down as its chief executive.

She was not, however, about to retire. While the Community Channel was separating from the trust and rebranding itself as Together, where Caroline is now chairman, she had yet another eureka moment.

"It suddenly occurred to me that there was no formal support available for founders in the charity sector," she says. "I talked to friends who were founders and they all clamoured for an organisation that could bring them together and support them."

Thus, the Social Founder Network was born. "We welcome young and older," says Caroline, "founders of both grass roots and international projects."

Given the plethora of voluntary and charity organisations within Hackney, Caroline is keen to organise a founders event in the borough, and urges anyone interested to sign up to the Network's newsletter to find out more.

Meanwhile, she has just begun a three-year term as a public governor with the East London NHS Foundation Trust (ELFT), the organisation responsible for mental health services in Hackney and its adjoining boroughs. "I have known so many people in the borough who've had really tough times with mental health issues," she says. "I really want to help people understand what services are provided and how they can influence those."

Having just finished her induction, she is full of enthusiasm and ideas. "We're thinking of having a meeting with charities that support mental health in Hackney," she says.

A little over a year ago, she was a chief executive with a large staff. Today, she is learning to do all the tasks she once delegated, like running social media accounts and working Mailchimp.

"It's exciting," she laughs. "There's always more to learn. I'm really interested in what this new chapter in my life will bring, here in Hackney."

Crossing generations

Year 5 pupils from St John The Baptist Primary School welcomed residents from the Windrush generation for an assembly

By Sheerie Barker

RESIDENTS from the Windrush generation shared their fascinating stories of coming to the UK with an assembly of Year 5 pupils at St John The Baptist Primary School, Hoxton, last month.

Members from Uprising Community Club in Hackney Downs visited the school on 5 November, and told schoolchildren of the highs, lows and funny and interesting times in the city which has been their home for over 40 years.

From how they came to the UK and why, to their hopes for the younger generation, the Windrush elders shared the importance they made to the British economy following the Second World War.

They built communication with “What a wonderful afternoon it was... The children had such a great time” the younger generations through sharing their amazing stories.

It was not just an afternoon of storytelling as pupils made the most of the Q&A session, which brought lots of laughter for both generations.

Deputy headteacher, Tom

Avery, said: “What a wonderful afternoon it was. So much fun. The children had such a great time and Uprising were simply fantastic.”

The afternoon closed with the children joining in with the elders singing the Caribbean folk song ‘Linstead Market’.

New schools board will seek collaborative approach to sharing expertise

REVISED proposals to support local schools are being shared with teachers, parents and residents.

The plans have been shaped following talks with headteachers, school staff and governors, and will see a Hackney Schools Group Board established.

This independent board will provide advice and guidance to the Hackney Learning Trust on key educational issues.

The board will act in an advisory role, championing educational excellence in the local school system and ensuring fair access and inclusion for all young people.

One of the key aims of the board is to involve headteachers in shaping local policies and to enable schools to work more closely together to share expertise. It will bring together local schools and academies, the Council, independent professionals and Hackney’s Director of Education, with an independent chair.

Sub-groups will focus on issues such as professional development, educational standards and support for vulnerable children.

Cllr Anntoinette Bramble, Deputy Mayor of Hackney, said: “This is a really exciting step, as we look to preserve and build on the fantastic work that’s being done across all of our schools. We’ve deliberately taken our time, to ensure schools are involved throughout this process, and we think the Hackney Schools Group Board provides the backdrop for Hackney to continue to strive for improvement for all young people.

“I’m looking forward to sharing more details early next year, and to recruiting members to the board.”

A series of information and feedback events will take place over the coming months. A decision about establishing the board will be made in March.

Residents can find out more at a meeting at Hackney Town Hall, on 24 January, at 6.30pm. For tickets, visit: bit.ly/2rehZqI

Over the past academic year, hundreds of residents attended 25 English ESOL courses.

Elssye Santos, originally from Brazil, won the Learner of the Year award. She said: “ESOL classes have changed my life. I can now go and see my doctor and speak to my children’s teachers.”

HANDEL rubbing shoulders with The Smiths. Purcell mixing with Joy Division. It can only mean the return of the annual Spitfields Music Festival. Now in its 42nd year, the festival has recently been broadening its scope, including modern influences alongside ancient and in the process, becoming even more fun. This year is no exception. Highlights include an immersive production called 'Unknown Remembered'. Shiva Feshareki, pictured, fuses Handel's 'La Lucrezia' with lyrics from Joy Division's 'Unknown Pleasures' LP and a film installation from Haroon Mirza, and sets the lot in a Hackney Wick warehouse. Meanwhile, a collective of multi-instrumentalists called The Coveryard are weaving music by The Smiths into arrangements by Purcell in a haunting exploration of English melancholy. Also not to be missed is The Riot Ensemble's performance of music by contemporary Canadian composers including Arcade Fire's Richard Reed Parry (pictured inset). Pupils from across the borough took part in the Tri-Golf Skills Festival at the Queensbridge Sport and Community Centre last month

OVER 80 primary schoolchildren teed off and learnt life lessons at the same time during golf sessions at the Queensbridge Sport and Community Centre, E8, last month.

During the Tri-Golf Skills Festival, on 21 November, pupils were taught about respect, teamwork and cooperation, while also learning how to play the sport.

The day was organised by the Council, Vibrant Partnerships, Lee Valley Regional Park Authority and The Golf Foundation.

James Hetherington,

golf and accommodation manager at Vibrant Partnerships, said: "It's vital for children to have access to and engage with new sporting activities they may not otherwise have the opportunity to experience."

"The Tri-Golf Festival provided the children with the opportunity to develop skills for life within a fun environment."

"We hope this is just a first of “It's vital for children to have access to new sporting activities they may not have the opportunity to experience”

many golfing events in and around the borough."

Following the success of the initial session, classes will be introduced at Lee Valley Golf Course and schools will also be provided with training and resources to allow more children to experience the sport and develop sporting and social skills.

The programme is designed for children of all abilities and led by qualified PGA coaches.

Daisy Brierley from the Golf Foundation said: "It is great that Hackney delivered a successful Tri-Golf Skills Festival, and with the support from Lee Valley this event was a memorable day for the young people taking part."

New Young Speakers elected

HACKNEY Youth Parliament selected Beverley Tetteh and Abdullahi Yussuf, both aged 18, as the new Young Speakers of Hackney on 5 November.

As Young Speakers, Beverley and Abdullahi aim to better represent young people in the borough.

Beverley said: "Being a Young Speaker to me meant that I had to take on an enormous amount of responsibility. I knew I wanted to stand for more than just words and be a physical representation and mouthpiece for both the young people and our wider community."

Abdullahi said: "I wanted to be a Young Speaker because I want to be a beacon of hope for young people in Hackney, and what I hope to achieve from this role is improvements for the lives of young people in our borough."

Celebrating a century of women

A LOCAL charity, which provides free media training to young people, has successfully crowdfunded, created and screened a film charting a century of women's rights. The feature-length documentary, 'Women: A Success Story', was made by 100 volunteers, each of whom was trained by the education charity WORLDwrite.

The volunteers learned to research, shoot and present the film, which premiered at the Castle Cinema, Clapton. Dr Joanna Williams' book, 'Women Vs Feminism', was the inspiration behind the project and she provide commentary for the film.

Ceri Dingle, director of WORLDwrite, said: "We hope a younger generation will listen to the wise words passed down the generations represented in this film."

Young Hackney has been collaborating with Volunteer Centre Hackney and ELBA on corporate volunteering projects to build relationships with companies and organise corporate volunteers.

Xanthippi Karkantou, volunteer coordinator for Young Hackney, said: "Local companies based in or around Hackney donate their employees' time to help us develop our spaces and provide high quality services to the young people in Hackney. I have met incredibly enthusiastic and hard-working teams of volunteers."

Soup for the soul

Muslim and Jewish volunteers collaborated to cook more than 1,000 portions of chicken soup at the East London Mosque to feed the homeless

It might be known as 'Jewish penicillin' but last month Muslim and Jewish volunteers from across Hackney and east London collaborated to cook more than 1,000 portions of chicken soup in order to feed the homeless.

Rabbi Roni Tabick from New Stoke Newington synagogue and Imam Mohammed Mahmoud from East London Mosque were among the volunteers on 18 November at the mosque.

Volunteers chopped vegetables and halal chicken, made matzo balls and stirred soup on Mitzvah Day, a national day of social action led by the Jewish community

“Helping those in need by cooking delicious soup together will help provide vital nutrition” involving people of all and no faiths.

Volunteers then ferried the portions of soup to organisations including the Salvation Army and Hackney-based homelessness charity St Mungo's to help people survive the cold weather.

Laura Marks OBE, founder and chair of the interfaith day, said: "Mitzvah Day is all about bringing people together through social action to fulfil the real need in today's world of breaking down barriers.

"Some of the people from each community taking part will never have met a Jewish or a Muslim person before, let alone chopped vegetables alongside them, and will now be leaving as friends."

Masterchef winner, Saliha Mahmood-Ahmed, added: "I am delighted to be part of this fantastic interfaith venture. To me the cookathon is testament to the immense power to do good that arises from collaborative ventures across communities.

"Helping those in need by cooking delicious soup together will help provide vital nutrition needed to ward off infections, heal the body and survive the bitter cold."

More than 40,000 volunteers around the world took part in 2,000 Mitzvah Day projects on and around 18 November, including entertaining in care homes, cleaning up cemeteries and parks, hosting teas and lunches for refugees and collecting clothes and food items to help those in need.

News in brief

Get Hackney talking healthily

AN event at Ridley Road Market last month concluded the latest instalment of 'Let's Talk', a series of events to help shape plans for Hackney's health and care services.

Since October, over 200 residents have spoken to staff from City and Hackney Clinical Commissioning Group (CCG), Hackney Council, Homerton hospital and Healthwatch Hackney to have their say on future health plans. Let's Talk showcased ideas about the future of community services based around GP practices in neighbourhoods; hospital outpatient care; an event with Peabody Housing Association about staying healthy; and a market stall at Ridley Road Market.

Attendees got talking throughout each of the four events about some of the most important things to them: plans for out-of-hours GP services; help and support moving from hospital to home; support for children with special educational needs and disabilities; mental health services for people with moderate to severe needs; patient choice and control; and health and care information that can be easily used.

Mark Ricketts, Chair of the City and Hackney CCG, said: "The views of local people are essential if we are to develop health and care services which meet the needs of our local communities; that's why Let's Talk and other engagement opportunities are so valuable."

More details about future Let's Talk events will be publicised next year.

Hackney's unpaid carers learn about their rights

CARERS across Hackney have been learning about their rights at an event organised by City and Hackney Carers Centre.

More than 70 people, including carers and professionals, attended the event on 23 November at the Tomlinson Centre, organised a week before national Carers Rights Day, on 30 November.

A series of talks and workshops took place about benefits, legal advice and information on caring for people, including a talk by Council staff about reshaping carers services in Hackney.

Jo Brunt, Chief Operating Officer of City and Hackney

Carers Centre, said: "It is important that people caring for a loved one have access to the right information at the right time so they are aware of their rights and entitlements as carers."

Around 18,000 people living in Hackney are unpaid carers for their families or loved ones, providing different levels of unpaid care and support each week to a friend, neighbour or relative because of illness or old age.

Christmas cheer

THE festive season is in full swing and this week staff at Hackney Archives are looking back at the children's Christmas parties captured by RA Gibson's studio.

Dressing up is a strong theme with angel wings, party hats and a child dressed as a snowman, smoking a pipe. There is also Father Christmas who, at the British Legion's party, is looking very cheery indeed, although perhaps that is the sherry!

Hackney Archives, based in Dalston, is carrying out a two-year project to digitise images from Gibson's studio so that they can be shared with local people at events around the borough and online.

The Mayor and councillors

Councillors are elected by residents and serve for four years. The last borough-wide elections took place in May 2018. Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee Council services.

They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues of concern. Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – see map below.

MAYOR PHILIP GLANVILLE

Hackney's executive Mayor Philip Glanville was directly elected by the borough in 2018. He is the political leader of the Council, overseeing the budget and all Council services. The Mayor holds monthly casework surgeries in the Town Hall. To book an appointment, e-mail: mayor@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 2212. Residents are first encouraged to contact their ward councillor. Civic and ceremonial duties are undertaken by the Speaker of Hackney, who is chosen annually from the borough's 57 councillors. The current Speaker is Cllr Clare Potter.
